

METHOD OF NONINVASIVELY OBTAINING INTRADUCTAL FLUID

Abstract of the Disclosure

A method is disclosed for noninvasively obtaining intraductal fluid. The method includes the use of an intraductal fluid sampling device to contact the patient, provide compression, and deliver heat thereto according to predetermined cycle characteristics. The cycle characteristics, such as compression cycle times and compression rates, may be varied and controlled by a control circuit.

H:\DOCS\JPS\JPS-1231.DOC
020602